

Manpower Employment Outlook Survey
Under embargo until 11:01, 10 March 2009 (00:01 GMT)

Manpower Employment Outlook Survey reveals demand for employees in Queensland continues to decline over the next few months.

The Manpower Employment Outlook Survey released today, reveals the employment prospects for job seekers in Queensland continues to be on the decline.

The survey, which was part of a broader survey of 2,779 employers across Australia, revealed that Queensland employers will pull back in their hiring for the next quarter. The level of demand, as indicated by the Net Employment Outlook, has fallen to its lowest levels since the Survey began in 2003.

The Queensland employment market shows a considerable decline in hiring intention in the April – June quarter of 2009, with a Net Employment Outlook of -3%. Quarter-over-quarter, the Outlook is 9 percentage points weaker, while year-over-year it has declined by a steep 35 percentage points.

According to Lincoln Crawley, Managing Director, Manpower Australia and New Zealand, “This considerable decline in hiring intentions is an indication of the economic situation in which we are all facing at the moment but the good news is from a national perspective the majority of employers are making no changes to their current headcount”.

“It’s promising to see that employers are not making rash decisions where hiring intentions are concerned, because despite the state of the economy, Australia still has an aging population and these skilled workers will need to be replaced making it much more important for us all to take a longer term approach. This will become increasingly pertinent when the economy recovers, employers don’t want to be in a situation where they are short of talent.” Crawley said.
