Under embargo until 11:01, 10 March 2009 (00:01 GMT)

Manpower Employment Outlook Survey reveals encouraging signs in hiring confidence in the Services sector.

The Manpower Employment Outlook Survey released today, indicates a positive outlook in the employment prospects for job seekers in the Services sector as some employers intend to increase headcount.

The survey of 2,779 employers across Australia revealed that the majority of employers in this sector intend to hold the line on their employee levels for the next quarter. However, the Services sector may experience some positive headcount gains in the April – June quarter of 2009, with a Net Employment Outlook of +7%, a decline of 10 percentage points quarter-over-quarter, and year-over-year this has declined by a sharp 26 percentage points.

“The continuation of the current economic challenges is reflected in a downward trend in hiring intentions since the second quarter of 2008. However the majority of employers will make no reductions to their current headcount, supporting our prediction of a ‘wait and see’ approach from last quarter,” said Lincoln Crawley, Managing Director, Manpower Australia and New Zealand.

The Manpower Employment Outlook Survey also revealed there has been a widespread decrease in hiring intentions in all States, except the Northern Territory where employers are predicting a steady level of growth in the coming quarter with a Net Employment Outlook of +14%. In fact four of the seven industry sectors in the Northern Territory expect to increase staffing levels during the next quarter. The Finance, Insurance & Real Estate employers leading the way with a reported Net Employment Outlook of +9%.

“The Net Employment Outlook is the weakest it has been since the survey began in the third quarter of 2003, in Australia. However, an increasing number of employers are holding steady with their current headcount as they attempt to ride out the global economic downturn.

There seems to be an increased awareness that even though times are tough, employers should not act hastily but rather balance short and, long-term by preparing themselves for when the economy recovers. To achieve this they need to have retained talent or, through a flexible workforce approach, have access to the right skills at the right time,” said Crawley.
